The countenance of the deceased was not at all changed; his eyes were gently closed, his countenance composed. He wore a white shirt with a black neckcloth and standing collar.

After all had taken a fair view of him, the flev, John Shackleford, Rector of fhe Rejicopal. House of Prayer' at Newark—the same eigryman who united Mr. Herbert to his last with—addressed those who were in the room, and said he regretted the circumstances under which he attended there—in an official capacity, but not to perform an official duty—but us a friend of Mr. Herbert's he was glad to be rectioned among them. All who were present might not be sware that the Church whose minter he was, forbade him to perform the funeral service in a case, however, and he was compelled to act in accordance with the law of the Church. He regretted this the more because he was the friend of the unfortunate deceased, whose fulls he was more were all on the surface, and accordance them were all on the surface, and accordance the was the recent of the surface, and accordance to the surface, and accordance the way the church. emphasis how he ridiculed, in articles which he errote for the newpapers, the conduct of a certain failor and outcoer who were judges at a fair at which her daughter contested for an equestrian prize and won it, but the judges awarded her the second prize instead of the first, just because she was only 10 years old. Another kind hady tells of the demand for an apology which Herbert made to man whose wife hud Jaughed at his fierce moustache; he went to the store which the husband kept, and when the latter refused to apologise, sprang over the counter, and would, the lady devonity bulleved, have injured him very newegly but alwars had several bounds at his heels,—of studious application when he was studious, positively refused to see a lady who had cat his invitation all the way from New Y to see him, because he was engaged in his st when she arrived; but the romance of his n'riage is most eagerly gossiped out to strang Last November, as the story goes, he as talking with a friend in Fifth avenue, and a lady pass, who attracted his attention. "Bread or Work" excitement was at this it at its height; suddenly two cadaverous ruff rushed by, and one of them struck the lady the face, saying, "What right have you to we due clothes!" She zereamed — Herbert rus to the recent, dominished by mine clothes!" HORARD SHEET HE WAR DE COL rbert's Letter to the Press. Mr. Herbert's Letter to the Press.

"To THE PRIME OF ARMINO."

The Tribust, Twas, Courier and Enquirer, with a request to copy.

"To the Press of the United States:

"Before going to my secount, I would my a few words to the press of America, and to its conductors, as men, among whom I have for many years been more or less associated.

"I have my faults, my failings; I have done my share of evri in my life, as all men have done; perhaps I have done my share of good likewise.

"Of my private history, few men know anything, fewer still know much—no one knows the wole; it cannot concern the public to know anything. As a writer ist me be judged; as man let my God-Judge me. Burial of Henry Wm. Herbert, eral Rites Denied Him-Public Se The remains of Henry Wm. Herbert, the "Frank Forester" of the periodicals, whose suicide we announced Monday, were yesterday interred at Mount Piessani Cemetery, Newark, N. J. Mr. Miles P. Anson, the personal friend and neighbor of the westched man during the latter pert of his life, came to this city yesterday morning, and prepared to convey the body to Newark. The remains having been pinced in a coffin, a hears was procured, and at 34 o'clock P. M. accompanied by a few friends, including Mr. l'Anson and Mr. Phillip H. Anthon, who was with Herbert in his last moments, crossed the Jersey City Ferry and proceeded by the turnplke—nine miles—to Newark. As soon as the hearse and carriages crossed the Passaic river and entered Newark, (at 5 o'clock) other carriages, containing iriends of the deceased, fell into line behind them, and the whole corbes proceeded slowly-towards "The Cedara," the late residence of Mr. Herbert, two miles above the centre of the city. "The Cedara," is the name of a romantic spot unbedded in foliage, through which, here and there glimpees of a latticed Gothic cottage are visible like the wicker work of a basket filled with flowers and half buried in verdure. The property—only an aere of ground—was many years ago deeded in trust to the use of Mr. Herbert, to revert to his only son after the death of the lather. The cottage is a small one, the stage is a size of the house, looking down upon the Passaic frever, to which the green inwa slopes, has panels between the asshes bearing curious carved heralds insigning the room within was that in which Mr. Herbert was accustomed to entertain his friends. Next this is the library in which he limmined whimself when engaged in writing; a pair of siag's antiers ornamented the top of the plazas in front. The walls of marches are seen and a server or the sashes bearing curious carved heralds insigning the terms. It cannot concern the public to know anything. As a writer jet me be judged; as man let my Goi-judge me.

"I implore not pasce, not a favorable construction—I implore sience. For what I have to secount with man, who may necestainly perceive and distinguish facts, jut certainly cannot perceive causes or divine notions or infentions. lence.

"Let the good that I have done, if any, be interred with my hones; let the evil, also—for the evil I can my positively, is such as can do no evil after me. I have taught, I have included, I have pus forth nothing which I did believe to be false or evil, or shything which I did not believe to be good and troe. In all my writings I have written no line of which I am assisance, no word, which I desire to him. by which I hope I should not do again under any temptation.

"I am very sorry I have been weak at times and have fallen—who has not done so?

"For justice sake, for charity's sake, for Godi sake, let me rest. I bear an honorable mans. I have striven hard, in great trials, in great insuptations, in a foreign country, in a like position among men who gild not, perhaps could not, synipathate with me, to keep it knorrable—as yea would have your own mames honored, and year sons preserve them to you, I charge you do not dishonor mine. Few will miss the when I am gone, broadably none lamant me—no be it I only, I in plore young, do not misrepresent and malign me.

"Having manid this, I have said nearly all—as word more only—if, as I presume will be the case, my earmest and hep-ful appeal for repose be desregarded; if the vantilance of the press ponness, on my cold remains, to feltr, circuit walks, beart-strings of my firing relatives—to blaze-forth all my misdeeds, in unblushing colors to the sam—les none of my friends—if I have of triand—stand forth to delend me. Defense only provokate bitter attack and gives a keener took to acandid.

"I die, forgiveness of every man whom I have wronged in, asking forgiveness of every man who has wronged in, asking forgiveness of every man whom I have wronged. I have aloned, so far as I know, or can atone, for every wrong I have ever done.

"I have the mean, I believe, if they be carefully managed, to pay everything that I owe, and perhaps to leave a small surplus.

"I never shrank, while I was allve, from meeting the consequences of my deeds face to face. I sever said a word to a man's back which I would not or Next this is the library in which he immired himself when engaged in writing; a pair of stag's antiers ornamented the top of the plazar in front. The walls of another room were himse with guns and sabres and other weapons, and in another simply gobiets and filled decanters were always kept standing in expectation of convivial guests. In every convenient nook of the grounds was a dog kennel, and each, during the life of Mr. Herbert, had an occupant. The lower floor of the house was thrown open restorday; the farniture had all been removed by one Mr. Stoughtenburgh, to whom Mr. Herbert was largely indebted, and to whom he had given permission to take possession. When the funeral procession arrived the grounds were already quite full of people; the neighbors had assembled in great numbers. The coffiu was placed in a small room—all the rooms are small—in the centre of the house, a portion of the lid was removed, and all who desired to look for the last time upon the face of the dead were invited to do so.

One by one the spectators pressed forward, "I never shrank, while I was alive, from meeting the consequences of my decid face to face. I never said a word to a man's back which I would not are did not say to his face.

"Remember now, all you that would assail me, that my back is herned for ever; that henceforth I can disprove no slander that is spaken of me; that with me no witness can be ever more contrasted; that from no nocusation, how false sover, can I prove myself not guilty. Of all cowardice, the most base and crue is to strike the dead, who can make no defense or answer.

"I ask no praise. Do not praise me—probably I deserve none. the dead were invited to do so.

One by one the spectators pressed forward, looked at the pallid face a moment, and passed on. No one, so far as we observed, exhibited more than the ordinary emotion occasioned by the sight of a corpse, with the exception, of an old Irish woman, who lived near "The Cedars," and had become familiar with the face of Mr. "I ask no praise. Do not praise me—probaby i deserve none.

"I deserve procach, for I am mortal and have sinued. Say so, then, of me, it you say anything, and let my sins go with my mortality to His judgment, who can tell, not only wheu and where, but not you will be member, also, when you judge me, that of all lives, mine has been the most unhappy.

"No connector, no friends, no country have been none for six and twenty dreary years; every liobe has broken down under my foot as soon as it tosonal it; every spark of happiness has been cuenched at it; every spark of happiness has been quenched and had become familiar with the face of Mr. Herbert while living. We saw no one shed come thither for the purpose merely of gratifying their own curiosity. Yet the seems to have solemn one, and no one seems disposed to speak in that presence slightingly of the dead or lightly of the occasion which brought them together. ed it; every spark of happines as soon as it has been handled. If I have sinued much I have also leved much, more perhaps than I have either sinued or sorrowed. It is the last drop that overflows the golden best, the last tention that breaks the silver chord. My the last tension that breaks the siver chord. In hist hope is gone—my last love and my life us to gether—and so, good by to Haway Hazamar. May 18, 1888. Paper. PAPER HANGINGS.
